English Studies in Latin America: A Journal of Cultural and Literary Criticism

Call for Papers

English Studies in Latin America (ESLA): A Journal of Cultural and Literary Criticism is a double-blind peer reviewed e-journal published by the Department of Literature, at the Faculty of Letters, Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile.* We consider academic articles that analyze cultural productions in English (past and present) and we welcome the following critical approaches: comparative and intersectional studies, postcolonial studies, cultural and gender studies, bilingualism and translation studies. Our special mission is to publish articles whose authors engage with cultural productions in English in dialogue with Latin American contexts.

The language of publication is primarily English, but Spanish contributions may be included if they fit within the journal’s scope. Critical articles should be approximately 6,000 words. ESLA also accepts poetry, short stories, reviews, interviews and essays.

Submissions are accepted throughout the year and the deadline for the upcoming issue is May 1, 2020.

Please email your contribution to espa@uc.cl.

*We are indexed in MLA and Latindex